WELCOME TO THE NEIGHBORHOOD: TUTTO CARNE (NOW OPEN!)

"I'm really excited about this," says Zachary Ladner. "It's going to be a lot of fun." We're standing in the red-brick corner property in Little Italy that has been home to a handful of restaurants over the years including Salvatore's, Tutto Giorno, Il Bacio and Nora. Come Monday, May 15, the name above the door will read Tutto Carne. The Italian-themed steakhouse is operated by Ladner and Carl Quagliata, the chef-owners behind Giovanni's, Smokin' Q's BBQ, Paloma and The Village Butcher.

After changing hands last year, the property at the corner of Murray Hill and Edgehill has been completely transformed into a stylish and sophisticated 45-seat bistro. Everything but the four walls has been touched, including the bar, which has been rebuilt as an elegant seven-seat quartz-topped beauty.

Chef de cuisine Ryan O'Driscoll oversees a steakhouse-style menu that benefits greatly from the owners' sister establishment, The Village Butcher. "All of the meats are coming from the butcher shop," Ladner says. "It gives us a lot more control over the product." For example, tables can opt for shareable large-format steaks like a 100-day dry-aged tomahawk ribeye, a 60-day dry-aged "3-finger-thick" bistecca alla Fiorentina and a Chateaubriand. Those dishes arrive on real silver platters. "We want to have this old-school feel," says the owner.

In addition to a robust list of wines by the glass and bottle, Tutto Carne will offer a first-class cocktail program. "What we're really trying to focus on here is cocktails," Ladner adds. "We want to have the steakhouse, but we also want to have this very high-end cocktail feel."

Tutto Carne will be open for dinner Monday through Saturday. Not only will Tutto Carne be the only steakhouse in Little Italy, it will be the only steakhouse between downtown and the eastern suburbs, the chef points out. "This is a great neighborhood that has proximity to University Circle, which is my absolute favorite part of the entire Greater Cleveland area," Ladner says. "And right at the top of the hill is Cleveland Heights, where I live."
